Evaluation of the Election Day 2018 Presidential Elections - Second Round

GYLA evaluates the Election Day of the Second Round of 2018 Presidential Elections held on November 28/2018, which GYLA observed with up to 300 observers in Tbilisi and 28 districts of 9 regions of Georgia.

Throughout the Election Day, GYLA observers have submitted total 78 complaints all around Georgia – including 36 complaints at the precinct level and 42 complaints at the district level. In addition, GYLA observers have made 35 remarks in logbooks.

According to GYLA findings, the Election Day was mostly peaceful, however, marked with significant violations and other important tendencies: facts of alleged falsification, vote bribery and threatening; separate cases of violation of the key principle of the elections – vote secrecy and facts of control over voters – will. At separate precincts, GYLA observers were limited in the possibility to perform observer duties, as there were facts of aggression and threat of physical assault against GYLA observers – during both the voting process, as well as during the vote count process.

During the vote count summation process □ procedural violations were revealed in separate precincts. Overall, the vote count and summary process were calm □ except precinct #59 of Marneuli district.

By now, GYLA continues observation of the post Election Day processes (GYLA is examining the summary protocols of the precinct election commissions and is observing the vote summation processes in the upper district election commissions). - Polling stations, revealed to be problematic during the previous elections (those polling stations were identified through GYLA observation during the previous elections);
- The districts, where ethnic minorities and Internally Displaced Persons are densely settled;
- The developments around the polling stations and the actions of law-enforcements (enforcement of the decree of the Minister of Internal Affairs);
- Inclusiveness of the electoral environment – among others, towards persons with disability, ethnic minorities, and realization of their political-electoral rights. GYLA also prioritizes the research of women's electoral engagement.
